

Some people look at a building and see wood, brick and windows. Koch Hazard Project Manager Cory Bleyenbergs sees material durability, energy efficiency and constructability. Whether it's a retirement community, a church or an elementary school, Cory brings his perfectionist's eye for detail to every project he touches, all the way from planning and design to the construction site. Because in the end, it's the details that tell the story, and the attention to them that makes a design great.
